Delinquent History of a Fictitious Auto Loan Owner: Customer #232431

Introduction

Customer #2324316, a 42-year-old IT consultant living in Columbus, Ohio, first took out an auto loan in March 2

Loan Origination and Early Payments

At the time of loan origination, the customer had a stable employment history, a credit score of 680, and no prio

First Signs of Delinquency

In April 2021, the customer missed the first payment due to unexpected medical bills for a parent, requiring tem

Increasing Delinquency

By September 2021, the customer missed a second payment after a home repair expense and an unexpected b

Collections and Communication

The collections team contacted the customer to review income and expenses. The customer reported taking on

Temporary Recovery

From January to June 2022, payments were made on time. The customer adjusted finances, reduced discretion

Relapse and Repossession

By August 2022, the customer missed payments due to prolonged illness and reduced freelance income. After 9

Resolution Strategy

The customer contacted Riverbank in January 2023, citing ongoing medical recovery. A settlement plan was ag

Analysis and Lessons Learned

Customer #2324316 demonstrates how life events—medical emergencies, freelance income variability, and pro

Conclusion

Auto loan delinquency often results from complex life circumstances rather than irresponsibility. Effective comm